this legislation, and, knowing him well, he had confidence that if the proposition should be presented to him independently, he was satisfied he would veto it. There was to his mind no reason why Mr. Roosevelt should bave his expenses paid while traveling about the country, nor would there be any reason for such a course when Mr. Bryan, who, he announced in confidence, would be the next president, takes the office.

The provision was opposed by Senator Bacon on constitutional grounds. He contended that the $25,000 which it is proposed to appropriate is an emolument such as is prohibited in direct terms.

Crowning of Haakon and Maud Not Attended by Usual Dis-

Up Rebating Practice.

Washington. June 22.—On being asked concerning the action of Judge McPherson at Kansas City today in his decision against the Armour. Swift, Morris and Cudahy Packing companies, the Burlington railroad and the Individual defendants, Taggart and Thomas, the attorney general said:

"The conspiracy was for obtaining rebates on a large scale, making discriminations to shippers highly injurious to the public welfare. The method adopted in concealing the true nature of the transactions showed clearly that the defendants willfully, knowingly and deliberately sought to defy the law, and was a gross contempt of its prohibition. After giving it careful consideration I concluded that the extent of the discriminations practiced showed that it vas a case where the sentence of imprisonment was especially desirable, and I directed the district attorney to urge on the court, in least of their conviction, the desirability.

Moran and his adherents were planing, it is said, to have Acting Mayor Davis remove a majority of the board of public works and City Engineer Kelsey-during the absence of Mayor Thompson. "I regard the outcome of this case as of the first importance. The sentence of imprisonment imposed for the first time on persons guilty of rebating will, in my judgment, have the most potent effect in checking the widespread practice of unlawful discriminations."

Attorney General Moody has always been of the opialon that if a person guilty of rebating could be imprisoned for it, the practice would soon be broken. As, however, the Elkins law contained no provision for such a sentence, it became necessary for Mr. Moody, in order to put into effect this theory, to find some other means for doing so. On an examination of the authorities, Mr. Moody discovered that under the authority of the supreme court of the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the case of Cune vs. the United States in the Cunited States attorney in each district that "in the event of obtaining conviction on a charge of conspiracy of this kind, you are directed to present to the court the desirability of inflicting the penalty of imprisonment, to the end that those unlawful practices, which have received almost universal condemnation, may be discouraged and prevented as far as axisting law will accomplish that result."

of Norway, Michelsen, in company with the grizzled statesmen forming his historic cabinet. Strength, determination and care, too, were written on the premier's face, Michelsen decided for a kingdom against a republic. Indeed, he largely made the new kingdom, but is avowedly against "the boast of heraldry, the pomp and power." However, the voice of the people expressed the Norsemen's love for old-time glory and demanded restitution, not institution; and so Michelsen yielded.

Mr. Foraker's Views.

Senator Foraker suggested that to make the appropriation by separate bill now pending would be preferable to making it as an amendment to an appropriation bill. He concluded that the appropriation would be an emolument and therefore unconstitutional.

Continuing, Mr. Bacon said he did not object to the president's visits to the various sections of the country, and referred to the tours of President Cleveland, President Harrison and President McKinley.

"Does the senator mean to say that they pid their own way?" asked Senator Lodge, and when Mr. Bacon replied in the affirmative. Mr. Lodge replied that "it is perfectly well known that they did not, but that the railroads had paid their expenses."

As King Haakon walked dowr, the long aisle to the dais, wearing the crown and carrying the sceptre and orb, women wept and men looked strangely moved.

Senator Hansbrough then offered the following, which was agreed to:

"Hereafter there shall not be maintained at any branch home of the national home for disabled volunteer soldiers any bar or canteen for the sale of beer or wine or other intoxicating liquors."

The senate also retained the house provision prohibiting the use for a sea-level canal of any of the money appropriated for the Panama canal. It was not debated. This fixes the type of the canal. The sundry civil bill as amended was then passed.
